distilled into the labels: "White Camelia Knights of the Ku Klux Klan," "Adolf the Great," "American Nazi Party," "Nuke Israel." "White Revolution," "Diversity is Chaos," "Jew Watch," "Supreme White Alliance" and "Yahweh's Truth."

In The Report's analysis of why hate groups have increased in number since 2007, the author, David Holthouse, cites three main causes: "As in recent years, hate groups were animated by the national immigration debate, but two new forces also drove them in 2008: the worsening recession, and Barack Obama's successful campaign to become the nation's first black president." It was reported by officials that Obama had received more threats than any other presidential candidate in memory. The Secret Service gave him protection early on the campaign trail. At some of Sarah Palin's rallies, when she charged that Obama was "paling around with terrorists," there were cries of "Terrorist!" and "Kill him!" Several white supremacists were arrested during the campaign for saying they would assassinate Obama or allegedly plotting to carry that out.

Three groups are singled out as "the most active and dangerous white supremacist hate groups in 2008: Ku Klux Klan, Neo-Nazis and Racist Skinheads" Klan groups jumped from 155 chapters to 186. The Imperial Klans (IKA) did suffer a serious blow when they lost the Gruver case and were hit with the $2.5 million judgment, including $1 million against the IKA leader, Ron Edwards. In December, the National Knights of the Ku Klux Klan sent out a media alert, calling for all Klansmen "worldwide" to wear black arm bands and fly the American flag upside down on January 20, the day of Barack Obama's inauguration. The Neo-Nazi groups saw a small drop from 207 to 194 chapters during 2008. This was largely due to the conviction of the National Vanguard's leader, Kevin Strom, in January on child pornography charges. The National Socialist Movement remained the largest Neo-Nazi hate group. In September, the cover of their magazine, "National Socialist," depicted the Democratic presidential nominee, Barack Obama, in the crosshairs of a rifle scope, with the headline, "Kill This Nigger?" Racist Skinhead groups rose from 90 to 98 in 2008 with the addition of several new organizations and the revival of some established groups such as Hammerskin Nation and American Front. When the Confederate Hammerskins met in March in Central Florida at a St. Patty's Day concert, it drew "skins" from across the country. Included were Outlaws Motorcycle club, a notorious biker group and of local note, Atlantic City Skins.
