experienced actors who want to polish their skills and beginners who want to know more about 'how the pros do it' will be welcome to participate in this three-part workshop. This class is limited to twelve people (aged sixteen and over) to allow students ample personal attention and one-on-one coaching with Lustik. Class will meet two hours once a week for three weeks and will include work on monologues, improvisation skills, and tips on how to master the audition process.

Along with appearing on Broadway, Off-Broadway, TV & Film, and at many regional theatres, Lustik has worked as a director in NYC and as a guest artist at various colleges. She has taught at the American Musical Dramatic Academy and The School for Film and TV in NYC as well as coaching professional actors privately.

"Secrets of Acting" workshop will run Tuesdays September 8, 15, and 22 from 6-8 p.m. at the Robert Shackleton Playhouse, located at the corner of Bank &

Lafayette streets in historic Cape May, NJ. The total cost of the three-session program is $125.00. Students are encouraged but not required to bring a monologue. For more information or to enroll, call Cape May Stage at (609) 884-1341.

Common Questions and Concerns Regarding Divorce

By Lisa Rosenberg Moore, Esquire
CooperLevenson, Attorneys at Law

Some of the most common questions clients ask when considering divorce include: 1.) What are my rights regarding my children? 2.) How will our property be divided? 3.) How expensive is a divorce?

The areas creating the greatest anxiety are concerns relating to the custody, parenting time and support of the children. Except in the most extreme circumstances, both parents will have frequent contact with their children and have equal rights.[1] In a perfect world, the Courts strive to formulate a parenting schedule which provides for as close to equal time sharing as practical and in the children's best interest. The Courts have excellent mediation programs to assist parents in formulating a parenting plan. Litigation should be a last resort, only after the parents attempt to amicably resolve child related issues.

A second area of concern among clients contemplating divorce is how much a party will pay/receive in child support. With the exception of families whose combined net income exceeds $3,600.00 per week, the New Jersey Child Support Guidelines take the guess work out of how much child support will be paid/received. The amount of parenting time the nonresidential parent exercises as well as the amount of alimony paid/received, affects the child support amount to be paid to the parent with whom the child primarily resides.

A third commonly asked question relates to the division of marital assets. New Jersey law provides for the equitable distribution of assets and liabilities acquired during the marriage.[2] Equitable, however, does not necessarily mean equal. The Court views marriage as a "joint enterprise" acquiring property due to both parties' financial and non-financial contributions to the marriage. Inheritances, gifts to a particular spouse and premarital assets which are not commingled with marital assets may be exempt from distribution.

[3] In today's stressful economic times the cost of litigation is of concern. When a client asks me what to expect in terms of cost I assure them that they and their spouse are in control of the costs. While it is true that matrimonial matters are billed on an hourly basis, the client controls the amount of time the attorney will spend on their case. It is important to remember that the client's ability to resolve the matter as amicably and expeditiously as possible curtails fees. Unnecessary motion practice, e-mails and emotional letter writing serves no other purpose other than to escalate
